Fives against the City Wall.

Mr. Herbert Leigh Glover contributed a most interesting letter to the "Daily Telegraph" in which he said, with reference to the London Wall, "I refer to that piece which used to form part of the northerly boundary between St. Bart's and Christ's Hospital, running westwards towards Giltspur-street and St. Sepulchre's Church, partly enclosing the old school gym. We used to play the game of 'fives' against it." Further on in his letter Mr. Glover asks what has happened to the Wall. "Was any of it removed to the new school at Horsham, or rebuilt anywhere, or maybe used for rockeries? The question may elicit a solution from some Bluecoat who played fives with me 'over the garden wall!'" As for ourselves we should like to hear more of Fives as played against the Wall.
